The Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, adopted at the UN’s Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing, China, 1995) aims at removing all obstacles to women’s active participation in all spheres of public and private life through ensuring women a full and equal share in economic, social, cultural, and political decision-making. This means that the principle of shared power and responsibility should be established between women and men at home, in the workplace, and in the wider national and international communities.

“The New India looks at economic growth and increasing numbers of industrialist billionaires alone, or will it also measure its success through indicators of greater safety for its migrant workers, women and children?”

Asks Sanjog’s founder Roop Sen while exhorting the Government to prioritise anti-trafficking measures, and therefore, investment into them. He juxtaposes the urgency to revive the process of legal reform in human trafficking, by highlighting cases of women, children and men having been rescued from bonded labour and sexual exploitation in Tamil Nadu, Uttar Pradesh and Delhi.

In lieu of completing 24 years, ANANDI held a national roundtable conference on June 18 and 19, 2019 discussing the vulnerability of girls and young women on account of discriminatory values, law and customary practices in the backdrop of revisiting the Beijing Platform Action Goals.

“Shifting from one initiative to another, it is not often the case that we come up with a solution, instead it is the problems which come to the forefront,” observes Bapna, Manch, a three-tiered institution instrumental in promoting 10 SHG Federations, also known as Manch.
